Summary of reasons for decision:

'Execution' is classified objectionable because it promotes and supports the infliction of extreme violence and cruelty, and promotes and encourages acts of terrorism to a high extent and degree. The GIF is clearly designed to promote, celebrate and justify the cause and activities of ISIS, while encouraging and instructing others to act in a similar fashion. The right to freedom of expression, as affirmed by the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990, has been considered. Political and religious speech are arguably the most protected forms of expression in a democratic society. However, the strong protections applying to political and religious speech are subject to reasonable limitations prescribed by law, and in New Zealand there are limitations on the promotion of extreme violence, cruelty and terrorism. In this case, the likelihood of injury to the public good is high, and the classification of objectionable is a reasonable and demonstrably justifiable limitation on the right to freedom of expression.
